give a gift that grows

Dear Pamela,

We hope you are safe and healthy during these uncertain times. At times like this, we are especially grateful to live in a tightly knit and supportive community. For more than 30 years we have been building a community food system in Vermont, which is needed now more than ever.

Warmly,

Melanie Katz, Intervale Center

This Mother's Day, give a gift that grows.

We are so lucky to live in a state rich with forests. But even in Vermont, hundreds of miles of critical areas along our rivers and streams lack the vegetation they need to protect our waterways.

Spring is here! Help us plant trees in the most needed areas around Vermont, and improve the state's water quality for the long-term.

When you donate $35 or more between now and Mother's Day, we'll plant a tree for you to honor a loved one.

Thank you for giving a gift that grows!

In this unprecedented time, the Intervale Center is working on the frontlines to respond to the COVID-19 emergency while continuing our core programming in support of strong farms, healthy land, and nourished people.

Now more than ever, we need your gift of hope.

Your gift will give hope to people experiencing food insecurity. Alongside friends like Skinny Pancake and the Vermont Foodbank, we are implementing new programs to get healthy food to more people in ways that are safe and dignified with a specific focus on serving restaurant and food service workers.

Your gift will give hope to Vermont farmers. We are supporting over 100 farms to retool their operations in response to evolving markets and demand, as these essential businesses adjust, survive, and thrive.

Your gift will give hope to future generations. We are planting native trees to improve water quality and mitigate climate change because even in a global pandemic, this critical work does not stop.

Among the uncertainty, one thing is undeniable: spring is here. We are planting the seeds of a healthy, joyful, and just future, and we'd love for you to join us by planting hope.
